"Global Recession Fears: Challenges and Opportunities in Wealth Management". Consensus forecasts for global growth in 2022 and 2023 have been downgraded significantly since the beginning of the year. Although these forecasts do not point to a global recession in 2022 to 2023, experience from earlier recessions suggests that at least two developments which either have already materialized in recent months or may be underway in increasing the likelihood of a global recession in the near future. First, every global recession since 1970 was preceded by a significant weakening of global growth in the previous year, as has happened recently. Second, all previous global recessions coincided with sharp slowdowns or outright recessions in several major economies.

This conference will gather experts and professionals from the financial industry especially in Islamic and Shariah related backgrounds. Scholars, researchers and practitioners alike will gather to address and have a discourse on the recurring issues and the development of Fintech.
